

An Office Can Become An Incubator For Germs

With the development of more virulent strains of influenza and winter bugs each year, office cleanliness and the disinfecting of office equipment has increasingly become an important Occupational Health and Safety issue.

*Research conducted by many specialists including Dr. Gary Noskin (Stanford consulting laboratories and Professor Charles Gerba (University of Arizona) has confirmed that common office equipment can harbour thousands of bacteria including E.coli, Klebsiella pneumonia, Streptococcus, Salmonella and Staphylococcus aureus(staph). These bacterium can cause illnesses and absenteeism.

University of Arizona research concluded:

- Telephones and computers are contaminated with up to 25127 germs per square inch.
- Regular hygiene cleaning will reduce germs and bacteria by up to 99.9%.
- Telephones have 500 times more bacteria than the average toilet seat.

It was reported in the Age newspaper that the estimated cost of absenteeism to industry in Australia is $7 Billion dollars a year. The resulting loss of productivity and decreased profit affects all businesses and certainly warrants the introduction of preventative measures starting with the disinfecting of office equipment.
